MARTIN ZAAGMOOLEN.

Painted History.

This master, though esteemed by several of his own countrymen, cannot be justly mentioned with much honour, either to himself or to the place of his nativity. He had indeed a bold manner of colouring, and a free pencil, but his drawing and design were extremely incorrect, and his expression even worse than indifferent; yet he thought to compensate for those capital defects, by strong oppositions of light and shadow, although he made use of those oppositions with remarkable inaccuracy.

Houbraken mentions a Last Judgement, painted by Zaagmoolen, in which the painter had introduced an abundance of figures, of all ages; but he observes, that all of them were coloured so exceedingly pale, that they had in reality the appearance of spirits.

MATTEO ZACCOLINO.

Painted History, and Perspective.Died 1630, aged 40.

He was born at Venice, in 1590, and became a very considerable artist in historical compositions; but his chief excellence appeared in those paintings, where he introduced perspective; for, he executed those with the utmost precision, and therefore was constantly attentive, to have somewhat of that kind in every one of his designs, to manifest his uncommon power in that particular part of painting.

FILIPPO ZANIMBERTI.

Painted History.Died 1636, aged 51.

He was born at Brescia, in 1585, and was a disciple of Santo Peranda; under whose direction he continued for ten years, till by the precepts of so accomplished a master, he proved very eminent in his profession. His genius was very fertile, and his imagination lively; so that he composed his subjects with ease and readiness, and generally filled his designs with a great number of small figures, which he touched delicately, and gave them a graceful air, with an abundance of nature.

BATTISTA ZELOTTI, called Cavalière.

Painted History.

Died 1592, aged 60.

He was born at Verona, in 1532, and at first was the disciple of Antonio Badile; but afterwards he studied under Titian, though he principally adhered to the manner of his master Badile. He was singularly excellent in design, had great readinefs of invention, and freedom of hand, and his tone of colouring was truly beautiful. His merit in every branch of his profession, was universally allowed, it recommended him to the favour of the most eminent persons of his time, and procured him the honour of knighthood.

He associated in several works with Paolo Veronese; and had the distinction of being his competitor at Venice, where he was one of the six painters appointed by Titian, to contend for a prize of a rich gold chain. The prize indeed was deservedly given to Paolo, but Zelotti's composition was extremely admired, and he obtained credit by the competition. Some charming paintings by this master, are in the grand hall of the Council of Ten at Venice, which are incontestable proofs of the excellence of his colouring; of the grandeur of his taste of design; and above all of the fineness of his imagination; as most of the subjects of those paintings are allegorical, and allude to the dignity and importance of the Council of Ten.

Painted History, and Portrait.

He was born at Bologna, in 1451, and was the disciple of Andrea Mantegna. He imitated the style of his master with great success, and excelled in portrait, as well as in history. Most of the works which he finished are in his native city, where they are much esteemed.

TADDEO ZUCCHERO.

Painted History, and Portraits.

Died 1566, aged 37.

He was born at San Agnolo in Vado, in the Duchy of Urbino, in 1529, and received his earliest instruction from his father Ottaviano Zucchero, who was but an indifferent painter; but as Taddeo advanced in years, and in some degree of knowledge, his natural genius enabled him soon to perceive, that he could profit but little under such a director; and therefore, when he arrived at the age of fourteen, he went to Rome, hoping to improve himself in that city.

As at that time he was very young, and totally unknown in Rome, he found himself in a most uncomfortable, or rather miserable situation for many months; frequently destitute of the common necessaries of life, and being reduced to the wretched necessity of sleeping in the porticoes of some of the palaces; though even then, he had sufficient fortitude of mind to preserve him from despondency. He was compelled to support himself, by grinding colours for the shops at very small wages, whenever he could procure work of that kind; and his disengaged hours he spent industriously, in designing after the antiques, or in studying the works of Raphael; till at last he appropriated one half of the week to labour for his support, and the remainder to the cultivation of his talents. However, after practising under Pietro Calavrese, and receiving profitable instructions from Daniello of Parma, (who had for some years resided with Correggio, and also painted in conjunction with Parmigiano) he improved so considerably, as to be qualified to appear in his profession with credit.

He soon distinguished himself in Rome, Urbino, Verona, and other cities of Italy, by many noble compositions in fresco as well as in oil, which are particularly described by Vasari; and he equally excelled in portrait, and in history. The Popes, Julius III. and Paul IV. employed him in the Vatican; and the Cardinal Farnese patronized him so far, as to entrust him with the intire decoration of his palace of Caprarola, and allowed him a considerable pension.

His style of composition was grand, and he shewed great elevation in his ideas; his disposition was judicious, and his pencil mellow and free; and by being competently skilled in anatomy, he designed naked figures sufficiently correct, and was particularly excellent in the heads, the hair, and the extremities; but still he was accounted a mannerist, and not equal to his brother and disciple Federigo Zuccherero. His real merit consisted in the genteel manner of his design, and the elegance of his disposition; but his colouring was not admired, because it rather resembled the colour of a marble statue, than the warmth of nature, and life.

FEDERIGO ZUCCHERO, Cavalière.

Painted History, and Portrait.

* Died 1609, aged 66.

He was the brother of Taddeo Zuccherero, born at San Agnolo in Vado, in the Dutchy of Urbino, in † 1543, and derived his knowledge of drawing from his father, being at that time extremely young; but as he appeared to have extraordinary talents, his father conducted him to Rome, in the year of the Jubilee 1550, and left him under the care of his brother Taddeo, who was then in great reputation.

Taddeo took all possible care of his education, and also exerted himself to instruct and improve Federigo in design, and observed with pleasure that his genius readily enabled him to make a happy use of every precept; so that in a few years, he was qualified to assist his brother in several of his grand composi-

* De Piles says he died in 1602, at the age of 66, by which computation he must have been born in 1536, though others affirm, that he was born in 1543.

† The author of the Chronological Tables says, that Zuccherero was born in 1550; but Vasari positively assures us, that he was brought to Rome, and left under the care of his brother Taddeo, in that very year, which was remarkable by being the year of the Jubilee. But indeed the Chronological Tables are extremely inaccurate.

tions, and to exhibit to the publick some of his own compositions, which even then shewed the beginning of that excellence, at which he afterwards arrived.

While Taddeo was engaged at Caprarola by the Cardinal Farnese, Federigo was invited to Venice, and employed by the Patriarch Grimani, to finish a chapel which had been left imperfect by Battista Franco; and he executed several other works in fresco as well as in oil, which procured him extraordinary honour and applause; but after the death of Taddeo, he was employed at Caprarola to perfect those works, which had been left unfinished by the unexpected death of his brother.

He was likewise engaged at Florence in some considerable designs, till Gregory XIII. invited him to Rome, to work in the Vatican; which afforded him a noble opportunity to advance his reputation. But, having received some indignity from the principal officers of the Pope, and on that account being determined to discontinue his work, and retire from Rome; he painted an allegorical picture of calumny, to expose those officers, in which he introduced the portraits of all those who had given him offence, and represented them with asses ears. That picture he caused to be placed over the gate of S. Luke's church, on the festival of that Saint, in order to make it more publick; and to avoid the resentment of the Pope, he quitted his dominions, and visited France, and England.

In the latter of those kingdoms, which may justly be called the paradise of painters, he received all possible marks of distinction and encouragement; and had the honour to paint the portrait of Queen Elizabeth, and many of the nobility, as well as the most memorable persons of that illustrious age; by which he obtained the reputation of being the best portrait painter of his time. He was not indeed so successful, in the designs which he executed in Spain for Philip II. for, although that monarch rewarded him in a princely manner, and loaded him with presents; yet, as soon as Zucchero had left that kingdom, his whole work was defaced by order of the king, and another artist was employed.

After an absence of several years from Rome, during which time he had visited most parts of Italy, he returned to that city; and erected an academy of painting at his own expence, of which he was declared prince, by the pope. He was superior to his brother Taddeo, in many respects; he possessed a very extensive genius, and an invention that was surprizingly ready and lively. His colouring had abundance of force, and his drawing is generally good; but, like his brother, he also is a mannerist, and they both wanted a more thorough study of nature, and more grace in the airs of the heads, to render them highly excellent. Yet, notwithstanding those defects, the paintings of Federigo are exceedingly prized, and his portraits will for ever preserve to him the reputation of being a very eminent master.

At Venice there is a picture by Zucchero, painted in oil, representing the adoration of the Magi, which for the composition and colouring deserves the largest commendation; and it excited the envy of all the Venetian artists. He worked, in concurrence with Paolo Veronese, Tintoretto, Bassan, and Palma, in the grand council chamber at Venice; and his performance afforded so great satisfaction to the Senate, that the Doge, as a publick testimony of his merit, conferred on him the honour of knighthood.

Painted History, and Landscape.

He was a disciple of Titian, and imitated his manner, as well in respect of design, as of colouring.

A very capital picture of this master's hand, is in the cabinet of the king of France. It is a landscape, in which is introduced the history of Christ baptized by S. John; it is very highly esteemed, and may be accounted a sufficient evidence of the merit of Zustrus.
