

Landesbibliothek Oldenburg

Digitalisierung von Drucken

Sketches Of The History Of Man

In Two Volumes

Home, Henry

Edinburgh, 1774

To the Reader.

urn:nbn:de:gbv:45:1-945

To the READER.

As one great object of the Editor is to make this a popular work, he has, chiefly with a view to the female sex, subjoined an English translation of all the quotations from other languages.

LECTURES

To the Reader.

As one great object of the Editor is to make this a popular work, he has, chiefly with a view to the female sex, subjoined an English translation of all the quotations from other languages.

BOOK I

NOTIONS OF MEN & INDIVIDUALS

SECTION I

Distinction of Man and of Language

THESE are the notions of men, or individuals, which are the objects of our knowledge. The distinction of man and of language is the first and most important of these notions. It is the foundation of all our knowledge, and the source of all our error. It is the first step towards the knowledge of ourselves and of the world, and the first step towards the knowledge of God. It is the first step towards the knowledge of the human mind, and the first step towards the knowledge of the human soul. It is the first step towards the knowledge of the human body, and the first step towards the knowledge of the human heart. It is the first step towards the knowledge of the human spirit, and the first step towards the knowledge of the human soul.

