THE REMISE DOOR.

CALAIS.

did not care to get out of the Defobligeant, because I saw the monk in close conference with a lady just arrived at the inn—I told him the truth; but I did not tell him the whole truth; for I was full as much restrained by the appearance and figure of the lady he was talking to. Suspicion crossed my brain, and said, he was telling her what had passed: something jarred upon it within me—I wished him at his convent.

[ 46 ]

When the heart flies out before the understanding, it saves the judgment a world of pains—I was certain she was of a better order of beings—however, I thought no more of her, but went on and wrote my preface.

The impression returned, upon my encounter with her in the street; a guarded frankness with which she gave me her hand, shewed, I thought, her good education and her good sense; and as I led her on, I felt a pleasurable ductility about her, which spread a calmness over all my spirits—

—Good God! how a man might lead fuch a creature as this round the world with him!—

I had not yet feen her face-'twas not material; for the drawing was inftantly fet about, and long before we had got to the door of the Remife, Fancy had finished the whole head, and pleafed herfelf as much with its fitting her goddess, as if the had dived into the TIBER for itbut thou art a feduced, and a feducing flut; and albeit thou cheatest us feven times a day with thy pictures and images, yet with fo many charms dost thou do it, and thou deckest out thy pictures in the shapes of fo many angels of light, 'tis a shame to break with thee.

When

When we had got to the door of the Remife, she withdrew her hand from across her forehead, and let me fee the original—it was a face of about fix and twenty-of a clear transparent brown, simply set off without rouge or powder-it was not critically handsome, but there was that in it, which in the frame of mind I was in, which attached me much more to it-it was interesting; I fancied it wore the characters of a widow'd look, and in that state of its declenfion, which had paffed the two first paroxylins of forrow, and was quietly beginning to reconcile itself to its loss-but a thousand other diffresses might have traced the fame lines; I wish'd to know what they had been—and was ready to enquire, (had the same bon ton of conversation permitted, as in the days of Esdras)—"What aileth thee? and why art thou disquieted? and why is thy understanding troubled?"—In a word, I felt benevolence for her; and resolved some way or other to throw in my mite of courtesy—if not of service.

Such were my temptations—and in this disposition to give way to them, was I left alone with the lady with her hand in mine, and with our faces both turned closer to the door of the Remise than what was absolutely necessary.
